

BIOGRAPHY

I am a Software Developer focused on personal development, community-driven learning, and individual and collective human potential. Strong critical thinking skills are most evident from an educational background centered on communication, science and technology in society, and human behavior. Software development became an intriguing and inevitable field to synthesize my knowledge. The very nature of its ecosystem—a high demand for fast learning to match the speed of technological innovation—suits my ability to sharpen and integrate ever-changing degrees of complex concepts.

Finding an environment that adapts and evolves to change made choosing Turing a no-brainer. I plan to graduate with confidence in a multitude of new coding languages and an ability to work effectively in solo or team settings, offering a cutting-edge professional and software proficiency.
